Are cars getting ugly?

Check out the Cybertruck's contenders in this month's controversial new issue, and decide for yourself

Situation

I have created a front page for a fictional car magazine called 'Auto' inspired by the style of 'Time' magazine, as well as their 'person of the year' concept, which often stars controversial yet very recognisable figures- in this case the controversial 'car of the year' is the Tesla Cybertruck. I was also inspired by similar style of Vogue with a close-up 'head shot' of the main person (or car in this case) the publication is about, as well as the bold, vibrant margin borders of National Geographic.

Objectives

The image is a close-up of the front of a Cybertruck, which is very striking and instantly recognisable. There are no other highlights, so this is the main focus- especially since it is centred and symmetrical. The colour palette is also very simple, bold and contrasting to be as clear as possible.

Specification

All the text is in Times New Roman, apart from the 'of the' part of the 'car of the year' kicker, which is in 'Lucida Calligraphy'. All the text elements are aligned in the middle and centred. The deck title is white to contrast the dark shadow it is on, and the text is black as its' background is light.
